ABSTRACT

A list of descriptive scholarly works relevant to Bangladesh are compiled in an introductory bibliography for nonspecialist users that describes essential aspects of Bangladesh's history, society, and culture. History is emphasized, but the listing also includes documents about social/cultural anthropology, sociology, demography, economics, political science, and geography. The development of Pakistan from 1947 to 1971 is covered as an historical perspective, but literature dealing with the Asian Crisis of 1971 and the emergence of Bangladesh is excluded. Section titles of the bibliography are (1) Historical Background to Modern Bangladesh society; (2) Society, Culture, and Political Economy in Bangladesh Today: Background Materials; (3) Ethnographic and Other Materials on the Non-Bengali Tribal Groupings in Bangladesh; (4) Traditional Culture, Literature, and the Arts: Selected Titles Available in English; and (5) Scholarly Journals and News Periodicals Regularly Carrying Articles on Bangladesh: English Language. Items in each section are listed alphabetically by author under subsection headings. (Author/ND)

COMPILER'S INTRODUCTORY COMMENTS

This bibliography grows out of a personal project of mine. The South Asian Crisis of 1971 and the birth of Bangladesh brought home to many of us, both scholars of the region and actively concerned citizens alike, the dearth of readily available guides to information about Asia's newest nation then in the making. After December 1971, with the independence of Bangladesh a fait accompli, the plethora of communications to me from academic colleagues in search of suggested readings on the new country reinforced my awareness of the need. Accordingly -- and, I confess, almost as a measure of self-defense in the light of the numerous requests for aid -- I resolved to compile as rapidly as I could a reasonably representative bibliography of secondary scholarly materials on the history, society and culture of Bangladesh, intended for the use of academic colleagues, university students and teachers at the primary and secondary levels. The project did not come to fruition as rapidly as I had first hoped and, contrary to my no doubt naive initial expectations, it has grown in scope. The present listing is the fruit of my efforts.

As the title should indicate, this is not a research bibliography nor does it lay claim to exhaustiveness even of secondary materials. Although it is meant primarily for the user who is new to South Asia Studies and especially to Bangladesh studies, I do hope nonetheless that scholars whose aim is original research on the country will find it at least partially useful as well. My principle aim has, however, been to develop a list of essentially descriptive scholarly works relevant to Bangladesh. The user will quickly perceive that if any single discipline has been emphasized in this bibliography, it is history. Among the social sciences, I have tended to favor my own discipline, social/cultural anthropology; the fact that the listings in that field begin to approach exhaustiveness is, alas, mute testimony to the lack of a large anthropological literature on East Bengal. From the non-anthropological social science and allied disciplines -- sociology, demography, economics, political science and geography -- I have been more arbitrarily judicious in choosing from my familiarity with their Bangladesh-related offerings only relatively few items from what in some instances is a reasonably vast array of possible materials. My bias has been to select those items which are in the main descriptive -- as opposed to technical or theoretical -- since my concern has been to provide for non-specialist users of this bibliography a set of references which in fact describe to the new student of Bangladesh the essential aspects of its history, society and culture.

Fortunately, for the scholar in the non-anthropological social sciences who seeks a guide to the more technical literature in his or her field, other, more complete bibliographical sources relevant to Bangladesh are soon to become available. Interested parties may anticipate the publication by the Southern Asian Institute of Columbia University of a number of bibliographical essays which will discuss the "state of the art" of the economics, sociology, political science, as well as anthropology and history, of both Pakistan and Bangladesh.

Being prepared under the general editorship of Professor Eric Gustafson, University of California, Davis, these essays promise thorough discussion and listing of the relevant research and secondary materials in these disciplines. Moreover, as scholars of Asia will know, the excellent Bibliography of Asian Studies, an annual number of the Journal of Asian Studies, provides a more nearly complete, year-by-year listing of scholarly materials in all fields than an introductory effort such as the present one could hope to approach. Finally, the student of South Asia already familiar with the tools of the trade will think immediately of consulting the relevant Censuses of India, with their admirable introductions containing all manner of ethnographic and other useful data. Similarly, he or she will be familiar with the Imperial Gazetteer of India and the various District Gazetteers as important sources of information. In the latter connection, I ought to point out that the Government of East Pakistan had begun the commendable task of updating the old District Gazetteers and producing a new series entitled East Pakistan District Gazetteers, under the general editorship of S.N.H. Rizvi of the East Pakistan Civil Service. To my knowledge, by 1971 three of these had appeared, for Dacca, Chittagong and Chittagong Hill Tracts Districts. One hopes that the Government of Bangladesh will see fit to continue this effort, which would be a boon to scholars of the new nation.

Although I have felt it appropriate for historical purposes to list the major books dealing generally and in the main with the political and economic development of Pakistan from 1947 to 1971, perforce including valuable information on the then East Pakistan, the user will note that I have avoided, by and large, the rather vast and qualitatively varied literature on the South Asian Crisis of 1971 and the emergence of Bangladesh. I have felt that even to begin the task of sorting out the myriad possible entries of both scholarly and journalistic accounts of the period would take me far afield from my more general task. Happily, it would also have been unnecessary, as a highly useful bibliography on this general subject is already available. The interested user should consult: Ved P. Kayastha, The Crisis on the Indian Subcontinent and the Birth of Bangladesh: A Select Reading List (Revised and Enlarged Edition), Ithaca: Cornell University South Asia Program, South Asia Occasional Papers and Theses, No. 1, 1972. This is an excellent and still reasonably up-to-date compendium of sources. Further discussion of the bibliographical and documentary sources for the Bangladesh crisis may be found in the appendices of Bangladesh: The Birth of a Nation, compiled by Marta R. Nicholas and Philip Oldenburg, listed below under 11.A.

I have strayed from the province of my general familiarity with Bangladesh materials in history and the social sciences to make a foray into listing a few valuable items known to me in traditional culture, literature, folklore and the arts. Some attempt to do so seemed desirable and consistent with this endeavor's general thrust. Finally, I provide a list of the scholarly journals and new periodicals in English that I have found regularly providing information, both current and historical, on Bangladesh.

The bibliographical style adopted here has been, with slight modifications where needed, that of the American Anthropologist. I have included only two unpublished, but forthcoming, papers in the listing, largely because of the outstanding quality and usefulness they display; indication has been given in these instances as to expected publisher. Few annotations are provided, these in cases where the title of a work does not clearly reflect its general subject or where the unique usefulness of an item deserves to be singled out. Should there prove to be high interest in the bibliography in its present unannotated state, a revised annotated edition will be considered, in consultation with the publisher.

I gratefully acknowledge the assistance I have received from many quarters in making this bibliography available. Various colleagues in the study of Bangladesh have been kind enough to review earlier drafts of this compilation and to provide helpful additions and suggestions. In particular, I cite the efforts of my fellow members of the Bangladesh Committee of the South Asia Regional Council of the Association for Asian Studies. In a real sense, this bibliography is a joint effort of the Committee. My student assistant, Ms. Victoria Kelly, has patiently labored in this task from its outset, both at tracking down the sources and typing the draft through several incarnations. Finally, I especially appreciate the willingness of Dr. William T. Ross, Director of the Asian Studies Center, Michigan State University, and the Center's staff, to make this bibliography centrally available in published form. To all these colleagues go my heartfelt thanks. But any errors of omission or commission, resulting in real or imagined slight to this or that author, must be laid squarely at my door.
